

Andrew Evan Greger

andrew.greger@gmail.com

July 1, 2017

To Whom It May Concern:

As I look forward to my continual growth as a professional in the field of Educational Technology, my hope is that any future position I hold challenges me to expand my knowledge in educational leadership, learning space design, technology integration and much more. Though the focus of my early career was directed mainly in the area of information technology support in private organizations, my most recent experience at Michigan State University's College of Nursing has inspired me to devote my skills to education. The recent adjustment in my career path supports my desire to feel more connected with those working to improve our society. I felt that I worked hard to improve the lives of those I worked with in the past, but it was difficult to make a connection to the greater good I was doing in the world. My hope is to always love my work and make a broad impact at the same time.

My goal when working for any organization is to identify areas in which I can add value. I enjoy looking for opportunities to streamline or improve areas of business functions to create a better product. I use the term product in the broadest context to cover any tangible or intangible object that may affect the stakeholders I am working for. In education, I consider myself accountable to students, teachers, peers, parents, administrators, employers, governmental leaders and global citizens. The burden is heavy for educators to solve our world's multifaceted problems. I find pride in joining teams to address concerns brought from internal and external sources. I believe that diverse interdisciplinary groups working together towards a common goal are our best chance to resolve some of our most challenging problems. I have aspirations that any future position that I may consider gives me the opportunity to contribute my skills to strengthen a team that serves a higher purpose.

Continual growth will always be a part of my life as I aspire to engage with individuals working together to solve some of the greatest issues that face our society today. I enjoy work that challenges me to learn new things every day, and on the opposite side, I enjoy sharing my knowledge with others to support their professional and personal growth. I also strive to remain mindful of and share my limitations as I am well aware it is impossible for one individual to hold all the knowledge in the world. I plan to remain humble, but confident, in my ability to support positive changes in the lives of others. In closing, my main hope is to have the opportunity to join a team committed to symbiotic relationships as we grow together to stretch for the highest aspirations set forth by those in leadership.

Thank you for your time and consideration,

Andrew Greger